Planning the future you want

Pension freedoms bring optimism and adventure to retirement

Will I ever slow down? Do I have the right plans in place? Retirement is a chance to do more of what you enjoy, and figures released as part of LV=’s tenth annual State of Retirement report^[1] indicate that far from winding down, retirees are making the most of their time, with signs that pension freedoms have made people even more likely to feel this way.

Half (49%) of retirees now say they view their post-work years as an exciting phase of life, with many using their free time to learn, see and experience new things.

STOPPING WORK HAS OPENED UP NEW OPPORTUNITIES

Nearly two thirds (64%) of people who retired since April 2015 say stopping work has opened up new opportunities, with one in five (20%) having decided to learn new skills, and more than half (55%) devoting more time to their hobbies. In addition, those who retired since the pension freedoms are being more adventurous with their holidays. Nearly half (46%) are holidaying in places they’ve never been to before, compared to 39% of people who retired before the freedoms were introduced, with the Caribbean (18% vs 11%), Australia (15% vs 6%) and cruises (23% vs 21%) popular destinations.

VIEWING RETIREMENT MORE POSITIVELY

The report finds this trend of viewing retirement more positively is set to continue, with future generations similarly optimistic. Two in five (42%) of those not yet retired think retirement will be exciting, and three in five (60%) believe they will have the opportunity to do more of what they enjoy. In terms of holidays, younger age groups are hoping to visit more far-flung locations, with 18 to 24-year-olds aspiring to travel as far as Asia (26% versus 11% of 45 to 54-year-olds), Canada (26% versus 17%) and New Zealand (25% versus 17%).

WORKING FOR AN ADDITIONAL FOUR YEARS AND TWO MONTHS

However, despite high hopes for enjoying their retirement years, many of those under 65 believe they will be working past this point, with people expecting to work for an additional four years and two months on average. In fact, one in ten (10%) expect to continue working for more than ten years after retirement, with this doubling to one in five (19%) for those between 35 and 44 years old. This could be down to a lack of planning, as more than three in five (62%) of 35 to 44-year-olds don’t know how much is in their pension pot – and of those who do, two thirds (66%) have less than £50,000.

LIVING HOW YOU WANT ONCE YOU STOP WORKING

One of the best ways to maximise retirement income and ensure you can live how you want once you stop working is to obtain professional financial advice. However, only one in ten (11%) have obtained advice about their retirement, and 70% have no plans to do so. Worryingly, this rises to nearly eight in ten (79%) for over-55s. ■
