What I Own and Where it is Kept

Important things like the Will, share certificates, bank account details, life assurance policies will need to be accessed shortly after death.

The death of a close family member or friend is always a traumatic time for those left behind. It is often made more difficult for those relatives or friends who have been asked to be executors and to deal with the estate, because they often have difficulty in finding key documents and other important information that belonged to the deceased.

Important things like the Will, share certificates, bank account details, life assurance policies all need to be accessible shortly after death.

Quite apart from making the job harder for the executors, it is possible that some assets may go undetected. For example, you may have a paid-up life assurance policy – in other words a policy where there are no more premiums payable, but which still provides benefits.

If the policy documentation has been lost or is hidden away somewhere, how will the executors know?

Insurance companies hold approximately £1 billion in assets that belong to policyholders*, the vast majority of whom will have died or disappeared. Their families have no knowledge of the policy and so the money will be lost to them. The position is similar with UK banks, who hold £5 billion for missing account holders*. Although the banks and other financial institutions do their utmost to trace account holders and repay this, a significant amount of client funds lie unclaimed.

Clearly, you can make it much easier if your affairs are in good order and your family or friends don't have to search high and low for documents that they don't even know exist.

* the Unclaimed Assets Register

It also means that the heirs will receive their full inheritance that you intended them to receive more quickly than if someone has to search for assets.

Gale and Phillipson's Checklist

To help you do this we have created the Gale and Phillipson Asset Checklist. This will enable you to keep track of all your assets and in particular, to let your family know their physical location.

We have also included a Key Contacts Checklist, which enables you to list the details of your important advisers such as your solicitor, accountant, and financial adviser.

Once you have completed the checklist, take a copy for key members of your family. Be sure to keep this stored in a secure place due to the personal information contained within.

If you would like further copies of this checklist, contact Gale and Phillipson:
